Where a creditor is compelled to petition for his dividend, the debt cannot be disputed (3), for the debt should be impeached by a separate petition, which should ba to expunge it. (4) And it is not sufficient that a petition to expunge it has been presented; the practice is then, to make an order for payment of the dividend, but to reserve the question of costs until the hearing of the petition to expunge it. U assignees can shew no cause for the non-payment of a dividend, except what would have been a good answer for them at law, before the passing of the act. (1) The necessity of petitioning the Chancellor to order a dividend to a creditor, must therefore arise, in consequence of the assignees setting up some supposed legal reason for withholding it; this should be set out in the petition of the assignees to have the debt expunged, and the dividend withheld from the creditor who had proved it; but he proceeds at the hazard of being ordered to...
