Excerpt: .the rock is more massive and therefore fresher and harder. The hardest rock is at the eastern end of the quarry and here a sample was taken. The rock is technically a granodiorite, although it is always known as a granite. It is light gray and coarse grained. According to the test it is a hard rock, with low toughness, average resistance to wear, and fair cementing value. It is only suitable for the foundation course in plain macadam construction. Serial Number 56. This sample was taken from a point one-fourth of a mile north of Scenic, alongside the railway track. At this place there is a steep rocky slope of 500 feet between the track above and the track below, where the railway makes a great loop in climbing the mountains. At the base of the slope a face of rock 40 feet high is exposed. At the foot of this cliff a sample was collected. The laboratory test proved it to be a coarse grained granodiorite; a hard rock with low toughness and fair cementing value. It is not recommended as a road material except in the foundation course. Serial Number 57. For some distance west of Hot Springs, along the Northern Pacific Railway, there are outcrops of rock which project as spurs from the mountain on the south. About one mile west of Hot Springs there is a rounded cliff with a steep face having a maximum height of 100 feet....
