Katies Adventure. th red cows badly; she winna eat, and she looks down i th eyes, said Christie, one morning, as he came in from milking. Poor cretur! said Alice, I ll mae her a warm mash o meal: it ll, mappen, do her good. The warm mash o meal did her a little good at first, but she got worse and worse towards night; and the next morning Felix, who was ever the ready messenger, was sent off by Christie to Dent-town, to fetch the cow-leech; and tell him to mae a th haste he can, said he, for hers varra badly. Away ran Felix, anxious about the red cow, for she was a favorite with all the family. When he reached the stepping-stone crossing of the beck, he was greatly amazed to see Katie, with her little bonnet on, who...
