Ever since France led the way by adopting her original and highly efficient rapid-fire field material, other nations have been deeply interested in the important question of field artillery rearmament. Since the adoption of the French gun in 1897 constructors elsewhere have succeeded in solving the mechanical difficulties at first thought impracticable of solution and many experiments towards improving the design of the long recoil rapidfire gun have been made, so that it has now been proved that a true rapid-fire field gun can be obtained. Discussion of the merits of the various systems that have been developed and numerous competitive tests of different models have been thorough and searching. As a result, a number of the principal Powers have definitely decided on a new material with gun recoiling on the carriage. Several others are yet conducting trials looking...
