Excerpt: . . . such a rate, as gives the Dane; but little Prospect of Benefit by a Change; and, besides, there is such a fixed Hatred between these two Nations, by reason of the injuries they have so often given and received, that it is thought impossible that the Danos, who have been for the most part the Aggressors, as well as the sufferers, can ever forgive them. Many judicious Persons do think, however, that the Save-de would find means to overcome these Difficulties, did not the Discontents he has raised at home make War dangerous to him; and the Interest of almost all the other Princes of Europe concur in the Preservation of the Done-i, under the Domination of their own King, by obstructing any further Accession of Power and Territories to the Swedes. And this is certainly such a Bar as cannot be leaped over 3...
