Tenure of office, entirely dependent upon political preference, offered no inducement for civilians to make a study of conditions when to-morrow might see another party voted into power, and themselves displaced. It is obvious that this system invited the low ideals and loose ethics typically voiced in the notorious sentiment attributed to President Jackson, To the victor belong the spoils. With a strange patience our people endured the spoils system for one hundred years. During this time a healthy agitation for reform began to make itself felt, reaching fruition in 1883. Congress heard the demand and passed what is known as the Civil Service Act. This act - with the amendments that followed - provided for the classification of executive positions, and assured reasonable permanence in office to the main body of workers. The law was at first regarded with much misgiving, but a quarter of a century under its guidance has proved the wisdom of those who framed it. As an experiment a few branches only of the executive service were brought under the law, but, the beneficial features becoming evident, branch after branch was added, till now two thirds of the whole executive service is embraced by it.
