Two classic romances dealing with the struggle between ancient Rome and Carthage, in the tradition of Quo Vadis and Ben Hur, by a promising young author whose life was cut short in 1930, when he was only 37. Sample reviews for The Figure in the Sand from 1924: Quo Vadis has a rival - San Francisco Bulletin Mystery, romance and religion woven into one garment with infinite charm. - Duluth Herald It is an excellent echo of the type of book of which Quo Vadis is still the shining example. - The New York Times Picturesque romance - a combination of Quo Vadis, Ben Hur and Vergilius. The style is poetic and romantic. - Colorado Gazette This book is not only charming, it is exquisite - full of life and color. - Commercial, Buffalo, NY Ah! Once in a blue moon a reviewer makes a rich find. The atmosphere is classic, the plot rarely original, the climax powerfully dramatic. - New Bedford, Mass. Standard Although it is the work of a young author, has much of the power...
